Chapter 1 by Katie Grace

I have to hear him talk all the time. He always says something about math, or science, or something so smart. He looks up things that I wouldn't even be interested in on the internet. He is so smart it bothers the shit out of me. He is so intimidating it's ridiculous. He always talks about chemistry and how the structure of the medicine aderal is one hydrogen atom away from meth. How scary is that! He is so ferocious when he begins to yell I can tell he gets a fire in his belly. This man I live with is so smart if ridiculous. He wants to be a chemical engineer so I guess I have to deal with it dont I. Even though he is so smart He is cute, loveable and always pushes me to go farther and achieve greatness. Even though this man is smart and intimidates me I learn something new every day. James I want to tell you I love you and show you how much you inspire me everyday but all I can think about right now is writing you this message. Thank you my dear, for all that you do for me. I love you so dearly, never give up on your dreams.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

"Brenda," James sighed, "you idiot."

She shifted uncomfortably in her seat. "How did you find out that I wrote it?" she asked gently, with the demure of a child.

"You literally wrote in it that we live together."

"Uhuh. So I did."

James rubbed his temples. "You're kidding me, right? You wrote that we live together? Work far more important lay past the small living room they both found themselves in, participating in the world's most awkward showdown.

He would quelch this now. "Listen, Brenda, when I develop the latest software update, you'll be as smart as me. No worries."

She lifted her head. Evidently, James was better at programming emotions than intelligence. "You really mean it, creator?"

He must have created the world's stupidest robot. But he kept those thoughts at bay. "Yes, of course, of course."

James couldn't mention why he was really keeping the young robot at a lower IQ...
